Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA BOWSER, NURSE.

Mrs. Bowser Tells Story of His Loving Devotion

HE CURED HER HEADACHE.

Said So Himself, and His Word Does Not Bear Contradiction-Cook Had Left the Family In the Lurch, but Mr. B. Was Equal to the Occasion.

By M. QUAD. [Copyright, 1914, by Associated Elterary Press.]

home and fall down the cellar stairs and break her neck to keep them company, nothing can be said by the lady the employs her.

I simply assured Mary that my sympathies went out for her and that I hoped she would be back within a day or two, and away she went. There was the ironing left undone, and one of my headaches coming on, but I set out to do the best I could and let it go at that.

Unusually Sympathetic.

By 3 o'clock in the afternoon I went bed with such a splitting headache that it seemed as if nails were being driven into my skull, and there was only a slight abatement when Mr. Bowser came up to dinner. I was dreading his arrival. As a rule, when he comes home and finds me in bed he stands before me with folded arms and nods his head and says:

"Flat down in bed again, ch? knew it would come! A woman who goes wading around barefoot in the snow or rain must expect to pay for it. Well, you'll get no sympathy out of

On this occasion, however, and to my great surprise he came upstairs with quier tread and laid a hand on my head and said:

"You've got one of your old headaches, and I'm mighty sorry for you As the cook is not to be found downstairs, I suppose she's gone?"

"Yes, but it wasn't my fault." "Of course not. Well, there's no use o worry. I'm not so belpless that I can't pick up a bite for myself. You lle quiet and don't worry." "But I am surry to have things all upset in this way when you come home," I said.

"Never mind, little woman. It's a long time between your headaches, and we'll get along as slick as grease."

Heaping on the Kindness. There have been occasions when I had headaches that Mr. Bowser would go whistling and tramping about and banging away at the furnace doors. but this time he carefully avoided making any noise. It was half an bour before he came upstairs again, and then it was to say: "What you want is something to eat. A headache is always worse on an empty stemach." He had brought me up some cold corned beef left from the day before, with a liberal slice of bread and butter with jam on it. I turned diggy at the tight, and it was all I could do to thank him for his kindness and tell him I hoped to have an appetite by and by. "I will leave it here." he said, "and the minute yen feel like eating I hope you will devour every morsel of it. I can stave off a beadache every time by filling up with corned beef and saverkraut. Just let me cool your head for

"You want another quilt on this bed, Always sweat a fever out if you can," I was burning up and needed less coverings instead of more, but I couldn't hart his feelings by saying so. He put on an extra quilt and then insisted on rubbing my feet to get up a circulation. Every move of his hand went through my head, but I determined to die before making any objections. He lifted me up and turned my pillow over, shaded my eyes from the gas, wet the towel again and asked to look at my tongue and then departed on tiptoe.

His Grandmother's Iden.

I was dozing when Mr. Bowser came up again, carrying a dish in his hand. scented the odor of fried sausages and nearly expired. "I happened to think of what my grandmother used to say," he observed as he put the dish down. "She always contended that fried sausages were better than any doctor's medicine. As soon as you can eat three or four I believe your headache will entirely disappear." I think it hurt his feelings a hit because I refused to make an effort, but he soon got over it. Then he remarked that his Aunt Ellen suffered for twenty years with headaches, but finally learned that if she sat propped up in bed they would go away within an hour, I tried to please him, but was so much worse after afteen minutes that he agreed that his Aunt Ellen must have had asthma instead of a headache

How Mr. Bowser got things ready for breakfast I did not learn until next morning. Then I found that he had ground coffee and allspice together. mixed sausage, corned beef, cabbage, oatment and sage together for a hash and dropped the wiping cloth into the teakettle. When he came up again I had fallen into a light sleep, and the ent was there. As soon as he began talking to the feline I awoke. "So you are here, are you, you miserable, wall eyed son of a gun!" he said in a stage whisper. "I can't wring your old neck here and now, but don't forget that I am on your trail. If Mrs. Bowser dies, and there is a chance that she will, I'll be the death of you within fifteen minutes! If she pulls through my vengeauce will only be delayed. have sworn to have your scalp, and have it I will!"

The cat got downstairs and out on the back fence as soon as possible to do some thinking, and as soon as Mr. Bowser discovered that I was awake he offered to go over to the drug store and get me some salts, carbolic acid. chloride of lime or anything else any of his family had ever heard of in connection with any aliment whatever. When I replied that I needed nothing in that line he offered to go out and arouse the butcher and baker and bring in pork chops and graham bread. He suggested pickles and sardines from the delicatessen store for an appetizer and for a long five minutes descapted on the virtues of hard cider as a cure-all. Soothing Literature.

As I wanted nothing but sleep to cure my headache, he decided to sit by me and read me to sleep. Under the circumstances I couldn't tell him that if he would go downstairs I would be asleep in ten minutes. He looked around for a book, but the only thing at hand was a copy of the voyage of Captain Cook. That was as good as anything, according to Mr. Bowser. Every word seemed to go through my head, but I shut my eyes and gritted my teeth and let him read on. How many islands and confluents the captain discovered I shall never recall to memory, but I recollect that he had been discovering here and there for a number of years, when he landed to be eaten by cannibals. Mr. Bowser's voice betrayed considerable emotion when he reached this point. He had never been eaten himself, but he knew how it must be. The natives were working away when I fell asleep and lost Mr. Rowser, the cannibals, the captain and all else.

It was daylight when I awoke. My headache was all gone, and I was myself again. Mr. Bowser had also read himself to sleep. He sat in his chair in a heap, the book on the floor beside film and the cat on her back asleep, with legs in the air.

"By George," exclaimed Mr. Bowses as I roused him up, "I didn't know whether you would pull through or not. You were an awfully sick woman, and nothing but my loving care and knowledge of what should be done pulled you through. And now let this be a great moral lesson to you to behave yourself!"

Circumstances Alter Cases. "Let me have some money, dear; I want to take a little trip." "Can't afford it."

"Isn't that too provoking? I was thinking of visiting mamma to keep her from coming here." "Why didn't you say so at first?"-Judge.

One Specific Request. "I want a pair of button shoes for my wife."

Sedentary Habits.

Sedentary habits impair and & prevent proper functioning of the organs of excrepion-skin, lungs and kidneys. Waste matters which should be eliminated are retained in the blood current. The liver becomes torpid, fat accumulates: indigestion. constipation and headaches fullow. There is no snap. Vitality and resistive power are lowered. "You can't do the things you used to do." A little judicious exercise and recreation taken regularly will benefit greatly. Wingert.
